One of the most amazing things about Indian households, thanks to our mothers and grandmothers, is how they do not let anything go waste.

In my childhood, Maaji ensured a circular economy in the house, using and reusing everything. T-shirts and pants worn by me would be handed down to Navin and when it was really worn out it would become a wash cloth. Happens in every home I'm sure. Recycling and upcycling are no new concepts to our mothers and grandmothers.

Even while making achar Maaji used the same approach. Every lemon peel was put to good use - it was stored and converted into achar. And Maaji ke haath ka achar - sabse best in the world!

That achar ki khushboo at home is pure nostalgia. From my school tiffin box to the food packed for my Patna-Mumbai train journeys, Maaji's achar brings back a flood of memories.

As Maaji gets older, my wife Kiran and I decided to document her secret recipes and she very sweetly agreed. I am happy to share with you that soon Maaji will be sharing her pickle recipes in her book.

My all time favourite is the teekha mirchi ka achar. Do share with me which one you like the most.
